Dmitry began his study of the Adizes Methodology in 2009. He was certified as an Adizes Cybernetic Consultant in 2011 after completing an internship at the Adizes Institute in Russia. As an intern, he assisted senior associates in coordinating their consulting projects in Russia and managed his personal consulting assignments as well. During this time, he was qualified as an Instructor of Adizes Synergetic Management Theory to teach courses on the conceptual foundations of the Adizes Methodology.

After studying in St. Petersburg State Technical University, he started his career as a software developer. He has held different managerial positions primarily in IT companies. Before joining the Adizes Institute, Dmitry was the Development Director in an international telecommunications company.

He has an extensive experience in business-process engineering, quality management, implementing KPI systems, design and implementation of corporate-scale planning and budgeting systems, and project management according to PMI standards. He regularly presents the concepts of the Adizes Synergetic Management Theory at conferences and other public events.

Dmitry is available for public and in-corporate lectures and trainings.
